

ACOME is currently recruiting for:

- Deputy Chief Medical Examiner
- Academic Deputy Medical Examiner

These are outstanding opportunities for board-certified or board-eligible forensic pathologists interested in leadership, education, mentorship, research, and public service within a highly collaborative medico-legal environment. Both positions offer salaries in the $290,000–$300,000 range and extensive opportunities for academic and multidisciplinary collaboration through partnerships with UPMC, Allegheny Health Network, and the new College of Osteopathic Medicine at Duquesne University.

The Deputy Chief Medical Examiner role emphasizes operational leadership, mentorship, quality management, and pathology oversight while maintaining active forensic casework responsibilities. A recruitment brochure is available here.

The Academic Deputy Medical Examiner role focuses more heavily on medical education, fellowship and residency support, curriculum development, mentorship, scholarly activity, and academic collaboration while continuing active forensic pathology practice.

A recruitment brochure is available here.

Minimum qualifications generally include:

- MD or DO from an accredited medical school
- Pennsylvania medical licensure at time of hire
- Completion of Anatomic Pathology residency and Forensic Pathology fellowship training
- Board certification or eligibility in Anatomic and Forensic Pathology through the American Board of Pathology

For more information and to apply click here.